

A large fire destroyed most of the Roe Hotel on West Main Street March 7, 1934. The fire loss was $100,000. Forty guests and a dozen employees managed to escape unharmed.

The old Mill's building on the corner of Main Street and Ocean Avenue sports a new brick facade in this 1947 picture.

The Glenda Lyn store, specializing in lady's apparel, was located in the Main Street section of the Mills building, bordered by the Woolworth on the left and the Russel store on the right. The Woolworth store had an entrance on Main Street and also one entrance on South Ocean Avenue, a feature that still existed when Max Kavner's Men's Store occupied this store.
