

Patchogue's "Four Corners" about 1920. Traffic is now controlled from a booth in the middle of the intersection. This idea was later abandoned, especially after the booth took a ride on the front bumper of a car for a short distance. The building behind the booth is the Star Palace Theater.

West Main Street in the 1930's. Diagonal parking was a necessity because of a lack of parking fields, a problem that was not corrected until the 1950's and 1960's.
