

On a hot summer weekend the railroad station would become a very busy place.

An elevated view of the Patchogue railroad yard and station, taken from the smoke stack of the Bailey Mill.

A train approaching the Ocean Avenue crossing c.1905. The switching tower had not been built at this time.