

1853 Charles Terrel built this new Methodist church on the southeast corner of Church Street and Railroad Avenue, where it served the community until the new church in 1890 was ready on South Ocean Avenue. This church later became the residence of Millard Weeks. In 1926 the building became an apartment house and it was totally destroyed by fire in 1939. Mr. Greenfield rebuilt the house in 1940, using the original foundation.

The Congregational church on the northwest corner of North Ocean Avenue and Lake Street was dedicated on November 27 1855. The parsonage was located opposite the church on Ocean Avenue. This church was sold after the new church on East Main Street was completed and it became the main part of the Lyceum in 1895.

The tower of Fishel's store, which later became Swezey and Newins, was an often used vantage point for local photographers. This view, looking north, shows the Congregational church on the corner of Lake Street and North Ocean Avenue. Jennings Avenue is on the upper left, and the bell tower and the buildings of the first firehouse are on the right. The time this picture was taken would be about 1890.
